Herbert, who knew the relation between them, involuntarily lifted his eyebrows as he took up his pen. You are thinking it strange, said Mr. Lyster, that I should have anything to say to Mr. Roden at a time like this. But when one is dying one clings, as if one was drowning, to straws. When I am gone, Clare will be absolutely without a counsellor. It had been my hope that you yourself Herbert shook his head. No, sir. I should be of no use in that way; indeed, I should be worse than useless. Any interference of mine would be resented excessively. No doubt-- though not, I am sure, by Clare, answered the other earnestly. He had had in his mind quite another hope respecting Herbert; but it was just as well that he had been thus prevented from attending to...
