Excerpt: .ending December 31, 1869--$350,214.86. If the reader will compare these results with the results of almost any of a score of other companies inaugurated about the same time then he will be able to appreciate what the Continental has done. Take the concerns known as the Phipps companies, for example, z .e., the Craftsmen Life and the Merchants Life; instead of the former having a surplus it has a deficiency of $31,364.60. What may be the deficiency of Mr. Phipp s new structure or whether it will continue sound until that enterprising gentleman has had time to dispose of it, and get up another, is one of the many things of which we are ignorant. The Asbury Life is a modest company; it makes no beast or display of new features or peculiar inducements, but it is intelligently and honestly managed. Turning to the...
