I bow to the mandate of those who have the right to command me, and I rise, in their name, to enter a solemn protest against the power of congress to prohibit slavery in the territories, or in other words, to enact the Wilmot Proviso. But it is due to myself to declare, as I now most explicitly do, that so far as my vote is concerned, I have no need of any intimation from my constituents. Despite the criticisms of my friend from Harrison, with all their sins and imperfections upon their head, the resolutions command my heartiest approval. I shall make an honest endeavour, Mr. Speaker, to approach this grave subject with feelings utterly divested of party. I am a decided party man, I confess. I am a Whig - have been from the earliest days of the party - have reared no other flag - fought under no other banner. My modes of thinking have assumed, of course, a strong party cast. But on this subject I cannot, dare not, think or act as a party man. It rises infinitely above all mere party considerations. It is a great question, if I may so...
